

Take Five with Paul Clements: Belfast Telegraph

Author and Irish Times columnist Paul Clements was the guest in the paper's weekly 'Take Five' slot. In answer to the first question "Favourite Book?" he had the following to say:

" ... I'm currently reading a magisterial book by Christy Gillespie about famous visitors to the isolated valley of Glen Lough in Donegal. I visited there in 2014 for my own book on the Wild Atlantic Way and wrote about Dylan Thomas staying there in 1935. The book, The Road to Glen Lough, captures the spirit of the place with outstanding reproductive colour illustrations and astonishing research. The curious side is that there is no road to Glen Lough, nor even a path, and getting there involves a two-hour slog across moorland."
